OUR PURPOSE
TO TRANSFORM THE FUTURE OF VULNERABLE YOUTH AND COMMUNITIES BY EQUIPPING THEM WITH THE RESOURCES AND RELATIONSHIPS THEY NEED TO THRIVE.

OUR GUIDING PRINCIPLES
• We “put the last, first.” Our work reflects a radical commitment to the most vulnerable.
• We work alongside those we serve to co-create together. They are not the problem. They are the solution!
• We believe caring relationships are the foundation of individual and community well-being.
• We hold ourselves accountable. We develop and use proven processes that can be scaled.

OUR STRENGTHS
• We have close relationships to the people we seek to serve and deep expertise in the places where we work.
• Our unique local organizational capacity brings rare access and sustained change.
• We have 30 years of experience in scaling through collaboration.
• We are leaders in developing and implementing proven methodologies.
Two business-owning friends have taught me a lot about what to do when nobody listens. Their business was born when the wife of this husband-wife duo went shopping as a new mom. She couldn’t find any clothes she liked, and she ended the day in a dressing room feeling overwhelmed and alone. There were just no good clothing choices for pregnant and postpartum women. The market didn’t respond to them, so the only options they had were “off the rack,” so to speak. Nobody listened to them.

My friends decided to listen. To take a real look at what these women wanted. Why not listen to these customers who wanted modern and well-made clothing? What could be different if someone offered choices they wanted? Listening. Choices.

Years of thinking, listening, sweat equity, and investing in people followed. Now they own a highly innovative company that profitably welcomes new moms who were once ignored in the retail space. My two friends listened and did something about what they heard. Everyone won. Including a great return on investment (ROI) for their bottom line.

Questscope is like that company. Refugees, low-income, and displaced people want something different – something not just “off the humanitarian rack.” They want more than to be on the receiving end of the humanitarian system. More than just the basics: food, water, shelter – important as they are. They have skills and creative desires that no one has recognized as a new market for better responses.

Again, those two questions: Why not listen to what people want to make things better for themselves and others? What could be different if we were to respect their dignity and increase their choice of opportunities?

Refugees and others “on the outside” could become leaders to find new solutions in the humanitarian system because they’re the customers. They have ideas and first-hand knowledge of the problems they face. And they have the desire and drive to make things better.

So, we’ve joined with them for years, designing better options: a classroom experience where all kids have the chance to thrive; a youth center that is a hub of innovation in a refugee camp; cutting-edge approaches to the growing refugee mental health crisis; lending circles for creative ideas; photography and storytelling workshops; and so much more. Not your usual “off the rack” activities for refugees, right? And they’ve grown in their abilities to lead, evaluate, and improve everything, all the time.

This is the 30-year experience of Questscope – seeing people as treasurers. Growing alongside them. Innovating with them. Improving the bottom line in our “business” – new choices and changed lives – for the Social Return on Investment (SROI) we aim for.

This Annual Report is a short read of this amazing idea – of the great treasures that exist in forgotten places and people. And the change that is possible when we see and hear in new ways.

Stick with us in this entrepreneurial venture to put the last, first! We generate a great SROI!

JORDAN:
For 30 years, we’ve walked alongside young people in Jordan whose lives have been ravaged by war and poverty. From the beginning, we recognized the importance of building local capacity and working together with those we seek to serve – resulting in mature programs with demonstrated impact.

- 3,300 out-of-school youth got a second chance at an education, enrolling in 120 Non-Formal Education (NFE) Centers.
- 200 university students led mentorship and outreach to 2,400 at-risk youth in juvenile correctional centers and community-based organizations.
- 120 vulnerable families received integrated support in food, health, and education.
- 50 Syrian young adults led mentorship and outreach to 3,200 participants at our Youth Center in the Za’atari Refugee Camp.
- 1 semi-randomized control trial (RCT) for a new mental health initiative – the Field Guide for Barefoot Psychologists – was completed in Za’atari. It is the first neurophysiological study ever conducted in a refugee camp.

SYRIA:
Our long-term strategic partnership with the Syrian Society for Social Development (SSSD), a Syrian national organization, has resulted in decades of deep relationships, rare access, and unprecedented opportunity inside Syria.

- 4,000 staff and volunteers served in 160 locations across Syria.
  - 25 community centers
  - 10 safe spaces for women and children
